Course Description

In the aftermath of 9/11, international interest has focused intensely on the Middle East's urgent need for reform. For many in Washington, democratization is seen as the best weapon against terrorism. However, can democracy succeed in the region?

With a few exceptions, the Middle East has had a long history of authoritarianism as well as religious and cultural sectarianism. Amid established systems of autocracy, the key characteristics of democratic politics continue to be missing from most Middle Eastern countries: representative government, free and fair elections, separation of powers, an active civil society and a free and independent media. As a result, the path towards democratization and political liberalization has been fraught with difficulties.

This course examines the underlying causes for why most states in the Middle East continue to be considered 'holdouts' from the spread of democracy and modernity. By analyzing the dimensions of state-society relations in a number of country case studies, we will examine the challenges posed by the lack of pluralism and a vibrant civic culture. In this context, a study of the prospects for political reform, democracy and rule of law promotion efforts will give us key insights into liberalization trends in the region.

Required Reading Materials

- (1) Thomas Carothers and Marina Ottaway, Uncharted Journey: Promoting Democracy in the Middle East, (Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 2005).
- (2) Rex Brynen, Bahgat Korany, Paul Noble, Political Liberalization and Democratization in the Arab World, Vol.1, Theoretical Perspectives, (Lynne Rienner Publishers, 1998).
- (3) Article reader available at www.universityreaders.com or view attached pdf links on page 6 of syllabus.
- (4) News and current events (see below)

Other Suggested Reading Materials

- (5) Amin Saikal and Albrecht Shnabel, Democratization in the Middle East: Experiences, Struggles, Challenges, (United Nations University Press, 2003).
- (6) Ghassan Salam'e, Democracy Without Democrats? The Renewal of Politics in the Muslim World, (I.B. Tauris, 1994).
- (7) Larry Diamond, Marc Plattner, and Daniel Brumberg, Islam and Democracy in the Middle East, (The Johns Hopkins University Press, 2003).

News and Current Events

A strong emphasis will be made on linking our course material to current events in the Middle East. All students are required to read carefully the “BBC News Middle East” section on a regular basis, available online. The New York Times is also a great resource to keep abreast of the latest developments in international affairs. I also recommend that you follow regional English language media to gain different perspectives and opinions about events. Some of the many accessible newspapers on the web include: Ha'aretz (Israel) www.haaretz.com, Daily Star (Lebanon) www.dailystar.com.lb, and al Ahram Weekly (Egypt) weekly.ahram.org.eg.

Course Evaluation

▪ Midterm Exam	30%
▪ Case Study	30%
▪ Final Exam	30%
▪ Attendance and Participation	10%

Midterm and Final Exam: Exams will be essay format and will be based on the readings, lectures, and items covered in the discussions. Attendance is highly encouraged and reading the material critically is essential for doing well on the exams.

Case Study: A case study that analyzes democratization issues relating to a specific Middle Eastern country is required. In the case study, you should examine the dilemmas the country faces in making the transition to democracy, the potential solutions to those problems, and offer recommendations on how the U.S. might best promote democracy in that country. The position you take is irrelevant to your grade. Rather, the criterion for grading this paper will be the quality of your analysis and your proper use of evidence from course materials and secondary sources. The paper should be 7-10 pages double-spaced and is due on the final day of class (March 12, 2007).
